The standard of care exercised by BP on those lines was surprisingly well below what we typically see elsewhere in the industry. And the history of failures on lines like that, it has been modest in terms of oil spills or damage. And we were discouraged, and frankly its a mystery to me why BP in contrast to other operators up there, did not maintain those lines better. HAIRMAN The C. Well, Ive taken up to the North Slope of Alaska over the years, probably the entire Senate at one time or another, and we got briefings about all of the safety programs and how all of these things were pigged and how there was this maintenance, and yet here these 16 miles of lines which carry the basic product after theyve gone through the conditioning plants to the big pipe-line, not only did they not pig it, but they didnt have a shunt to take out any material that gathered in that pipeline, in those pipe-lines before they had a pig pipeline. Admiral B. Yes, sir, thats correct. ARRETT The C. And one of the reasons for the low pressure was HAIRMAN that they didnt want to try to push that stuff so it actually went into the big pipeline, because they would have had liability in the big pipeline if something happened. But I really dont understand a system that allows the operator to determine regulations simply by the...
