Excerpt from The Roxbury Magazine One of the features of the general scheme for park development proposed by the first Board of Park Commissioners in 1876 was a large park in West Roxbury. The commission, fortunately, in this park, as well as in the whole park system of the city, had the advice of Mr. Frederick Law Olmsted, the eminent landscape architect, and his associates; and to their well-developed plan, so carefully thought out, in advance is due the beauty of design which becomes more and more apparent as the plan develops from year to year.

Franklin Park was first called West Roxbury Park on account of its location; but the name was changed in January 1882. The change was made, not simply with the object of honoring one of the nation's greatest men, a resident of Boston, but also because it was at that time proposed to use a portion of the Franklin Fund when it became available in 1891 for the payment of the park loan. But on account of legal objections or for...
