Excerpt: .us, their component parts not always scientifically selected. In one band of five performers three had drums, which produce a maximum of noise with a minimum of education, and are therefore always popular; one had cymbals, and the fifth an uncertain-looking brass instrument capable of ear-splitting sounds. The musicians were gaily clothed and looked much like monkeys of a larger growth escaped from barrel organs. In the evening I gave cakes and sweetmeats to the servants children, little ragged mites with eager faces, which shone with delight as the sweets were poured into the dirty little chudders they held up. Afterwards we had a few fire-AMATEUR FIREWORKS. 131 works for their amusement--few, and often far between--for the servants could not always induce them to go off. But then the excitement when they did! It was much greater than if there had been any certainty....
