Excerpt: .a fomenter of trouble, until we cooled his blood in prison. No, Zadock; I ll have nothing to do with your scheme, and by the Lord! if I were King, I d send any man who approached me on the subject to Botany Bay. We are always conferring favors on your savage country, and the red Indians are more grateful than your Bostonese. Well, sir; plenty of lead is the remedy for the colonial malady, and the colonists shall have bellyfulls of it. I was surprised at my own patience under this tirade, but I remembered my mission. Sir Geoffrey, I said, speaking calmly, while he panted with passion in his chair, The Privy Council might at least consider the question of our title on its merits. If it does, I am certain it will decide in our favor. No, he roared, The Privy...
